

For Older Adults Recovering From the Emotional Toll of THE COVID-19 DISASTER

The COVID-19 pandemic has created a state of disaster in our communities, leaving lives changed and futures uncertain. Even if you have not suffered directly from the coronavirus, no one who experiences a disaster is untouched by it.

For many a disaster continues as a very real presence even long after it has passed. Feelings of sadness, depression, frustration, anger, and anxiety are common. It is not unusual for these feelings to last for many months. Learning to recognize the normal reactions and emotions that occur can help you better understand these feelings and become more comfortable and effective in coping with them.

As an older adult, you probably have many of these reactions and feelings; however, some may be different or intensified. It is important to ask for support when you need it.

The following information explains the range of feelings and behaviors you can expect and how you, your friends, and neighbors can best help yourselves and each other during this time of recovery. Suggestions for coping with your feelings are offered throughout this document.

WHY DO I FEEL THE WAY I DO?

It is very common for people to experience a wide range of emotional reactions to a disaster. These reactions are experienced through thoughts, feelings, and actions, and are often very upsetting to you and those around you.

However, it is extremely important to remember that they are NORMAL REACTIONS TO AN ABNORMAL EVENT. You have been through an exceptionally stressful situation and these emotional reactions may continue for many months following the disaster.

COMMON FEELINGS

Current losses can trigger memories or feelings associated with prior losses. After a disaster you may experience the following:

Fear of contracting COVID-19 illness • Fear of dependency or lack of self-sufficiency • Worry about limited financial resources • Fear of institutionalization • Fear of a decline in health and mobility

COMMON REACTIONS

Withdrawing and/or isolating yourself from family and friends
• Concealing the full extent of the disaster's impact • No longer caring about participating in activities that were once enjoyable
• No motivation to rebuild social connections or start over—apathy

THINGS TO LOOK FOR

YOUR BEHAVIORS

Having problems falling or staying asleep

- Isolating yourself or withdrawing from others
- Keeping excessively busy and preoccupied to avoid the unpleasant effects of the disaster
- At times, becoming overly alert or easily startled
- Avoiding activities, places, or even people that remind you of the disaster
- Experiencing more conflicts or tension with family members or other people/more anger
- Crying easily or becoming tearful for no apparent reason
- Experiencing an increase or decrease in your normal appetite
- Drinking more alcoholic beverages

YOUR THOUGHTS

Trouble concentrating or remembering things

- Difficulty with making decisions
- Frequent replaying of the events and circumstances of the disaster in your mind
- Recurring dreams or nightmares about the disaster
- Questioning of your spiritual or religious beliefs

YOUR FEELINGS

“Just not yourself,” out of balance, or easily upset

- Loss of interest in everyday activities
- A sense of despair, hopelessness, or emptiness about the future
- Anxiety or fear, especially when things remind you of the disaster
- Irritability, shortness of temper, or anger and resentment
- Depression, sadness, or feeling down much of the time

YOUR HEALTH

As you endure long-term stress, your health can be adversely affected. It is common for people to have headaches, stomach or intestinal problems, colds, infections, and allergies more frequently. In addition, preexisting medical conditions such as heart problems and high blood pressure may be exacerbated by the prolonged stress.

HOW TO COPE AND WHAT WORKS

Talk to others about how you are feeling; it is important to talk about your experiences. You need to express sadness, grief, anger, and fears over what has happened and what you face

- Don't overwork yourself; find time for recreation, relaxation, or a favorite hobby
- Do not let yourself become isolated; seek out and maintain connections with your community, friends, relatives, neighbors, coworkers, or people who attend your place of worship; talk about your experiences with them

- Pay close attention to your physical health, as prolonged stress takes its toll on your body; maintain a good diet and make sure you are getting enough sleep; it is also helpful to be physically active or exercise
- Upsetting times can cause some people to use alcohol or drugs to cope with the stress; it does not help in the long run and will likely cause other problems

WHAT CAN I EXPECT?

There are many concerns, adjustments, and ordeals that follow the experience of a disaster. Generally, within a short time there is the reality of financial setbacks and personal devastation from the loss of loved ones. The endless adjustments that you and your family must make will put additional stress on your relationships and daily living. You may also grow physically and mentally weary from continuing requirements to wear face coverings in public and to keep a safe distance from others. All of these factors can hinder your ability to move forward.

In the aftermath of a disaster, it is important to remember that it will take time to heal and recover from the emotional effects of the event. However, with the passing of time, your efforts to cope will begin to reduce the intensity and duration of these reactions and behaviors.
